2. People in Uganda are constantly cutting down trees to get firewood, building among others. The deforestation rate in the country is very high. With only 10% of Uganda's rural population connected to the electrical power, there is little option but to burn wood. This has led to one of the worst deforestation rates in the world. The country's Nation Environment Management Authority says that every year, 2.6% of the country's forests are cut down for fuel, agriculture and to make ways for population growth. If things stay as they are now, Uganda will lose all its forest cover in less than 25 years.
